

SOSUME

In a world full of baffling choices, sometimes it's nice to have someone to edit things down for you. Offering pieces in organic and natural fabrics in a limited palette of black, white and grey, Sosume's range is unashamedly succinct, yet at the same time versatile and timeless. There are no bells and whistles either: just quietly clever, oh-so-cool items that won't overwhelm their lucky wearer.

boom boom boom

...let's go back to my room. To talk about the guerrilla goodness that is the Boom Boom! Revolution. Each Boom Boom kit comes with 26 cards that each specify an individual 'Act of Kindness' mission. Just like any pay-it-forward karmic kindness, you complete your good deed then pass your card onto the recipient for them to continue the cycle of altruism. Best part is, you can track your mission online at boomboomcards.com and see how far it has travelled. So if you would like to see more good in the world, here's where to start.

One of the great things about buying jewellery made from recycled materials is finding out what your new favourite purchase used to be in days gone by. To look at these engraved earrings, you'd think they were just some beautiful silver pieces to make your ears pretty. You'd never guess that they actually started life as something completely different. But sterling silver is great at reincarnation, apparently, and this pretty pair is made from 100% recycled sterling silver sourced from photographic and industrial applications. We commend designer Kylie Gartside on what can only be called a sterling idea.

Melbourne label Bento has established production of their beautiful, classic pieces within just ten kilometres of their Melbourne base. Quite a feat! They've made sure all of their fabrics come from suppliers in countries with good human rights records, and next up, they're scoping for locally-made fabrics. Designer Samantha Hardman has come a long way too, since leaving her well-rewarded job at a large bank to follow the Bento dream. We're in love with the simple but striking shapes and the colour palette of her designs. Heirlooms in the making.
